This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1875 edition. Excerpt: ... long by 72 feet wide, of five stories, with a capacity of 30,000 spindles. Nearly all the stone necessary for the construction of this large building was quarried from a ledge a few rods distant. The old mill, erected in 1807, was removed to the rear, and is now used for a storehouse. It had been enlarged at different times, until it had reached the respectable dimensions of 150 feet long and three stories high, but its glory had departed. What a world of picking, and lapping, and carding, and drawing, and twisting, and spinning, and spooling, and dressing, and weaving, and packing, it had witnessed in its day! and what an amount of hurrying, and scolding, and fretting and sneezing, and laughing, and chatting! But all this could not save the old mill, and the whir of the spindle and the clickclack of the shuttle has ceased within its walls for ever. It could not stand the march of improvement. Its compeer across the river, went off, a few years before, in a chariot of fire, while the old green mill is made to sit solitary in the back ground awaiting whatever fate may be in reserve for it in the future. The earliest items pertaining to schools in this village, that I have been able to find, reach back into the last century. Joseph B. Pettis is distinctly remembered, as a teacher, by a gentleman now living, in whose grandfather's family Mr. Pettis boarded at the time. The school was kept in the chambers of Anthony Arnold's house, opposite Mr. Enos Lapham's. In 1803 the first school-house was built, and used both for schools and religious meetings. The building still stands, and is used as a wheelwright's shop. It was formally dedicated with religious services. The first term of instruction commenced September 10, 1803, with Mr. Pettis as...
